HILO, HAWAII.

President did not seem to like being told that the speaker knew as much as himself, through "Panama-Bonnet," about these islands, as he had been here and kept up a correspondence with people here for thirty years. He had stood by Mr. Cleveland during his first administration, but, in his second, the first thing he did was to put his foot in it by selecting a renegade Republican for Secretary of State, and the Hawaiian policy was chiefly Grassham's formulated to spite Harrison.

H. E. Waity of Bishop & Co. was called upon as a representative of the bankers. Personally he was in favor of annexation. It was the best thing for the country, which, without being too mercenary, the people should consider. He should be with them first, last and always.

A. V. Gear said: I am an American, always have been and always expect to be. I have always thought annexation would be a good thing, but not till the last year have I been absolutely convinced that it was the only thing for the country. I shall work for the annexation of Hawaii to the United States, and will do all in my power to bring it about. I believe it will help every class on the islands, both financially and socially, and I trust our hopes will be realized in the not distant future.

W. O. Smith, the Attorney General, on behalf of the Government denounced the rumors that it was not honestly for annexation. Its members knew the sentiments of the people.

Dr. Wood had been an annexationist from the time he arrived in the country, and that in fact was his only politics here.

D. L. Naone had learned to regard the word annexation as signifying stability and peace. He had been working for peace since 1887. If the Government were opposed to annexation, which he did not believe, turn them out.

Geo. A. Davis was introduced as an Englishman, but said he was a born American, though he had spent much of his life in Canada, and he hoped some day to cast his ballot in the State of Hawaii.

Mr. Hartwell told of his insistence upon making Liliuokalani's abdication, when her friends asked him to draft it, a document that should have no holes to crawl out of. He then gave place to the president newly elected and the meeting adjourned.
